WOMEN IN MEDICINE
INSPIRING CHANGE

WELCOME

BY DR EMILIA DAUWAY
AMA QUEENSLAND VICE PRESIDENT

Thank you for attending this morning's Women in Medicine Breakfast. Our theme today is women in medicine inspiring change, and each of you are an inspiration.

All over Australia, female doctors are not only smashing the glass ceiling, but shattering stereotypes and disrupting the status quo.

When I started my general surgery training back home in the United States, I was the only woman and only African-American in my program. My hospital had no female surgeons of any specialty, so I went through years of training without a woman mentor.

However, I had been mentored all my life by a very strong woman – my mother, who after retirement received her PhD in education at age 69 from the University of Oklahoma, which had not allowed black students when she was younger, and went on to become Vice President of a university. My mother instilled in me a sense that I could do anything, bring about change and make an impact.

In my first year of medical school, my sister was diagnosed with breast cancer. That experience sparked my interest in surgical oncology, specifically breast and oncoplastic surgery. Challenges in delivering surgical care ignited interest in innovation and led to co-inventing radioactive seed localisation for breast lesions.

As October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month, all proceeds from our raffle today will go to Restore more, a non-profit organisation dedicated to supporting and funding reconstructive surgery for regionally disadvantaged women facing breast cancer challenges.

Please join me this morning to recognise, celebrate and inspire change in each other, in our communities, and in our profession.

RESTORE more

As October is Breast Cancer Awareness Month, there will also be a raffle that raises money for RESTORE more. RESTORE more offers an opportunity to provide women with information helping them to make an informed treatment decision versus a fear-based decision that many later regret. We assist in creating innovative solutions to remove barriers for women challenged with access to their desired choice for treatment.
